

“When we talk about capturing every moment during gameplay, we also mean capturing every detail. Every pattern of a player’s run and every feature of his movements are made possible by real-life performance data we collect during gameplay,” says David Rutter, EA SPORTS lead gameplay programmer. “The decisions footballers make on the pitch are unique to them and we can now capture and analyse each decision and movement when a player makes it.” The main purpose of the Real Player Motion Data is to realistically determine what, where, when and how players perform their physical actions. The new technology also uses the real player data to adjust the camera, player and ball models in “player perception”. There is a number of new features in FIFA 22: New player engine. Deeper and more realistic male and female player models. New collision physics. More realistic player locomotion. New AI. New player controls. New presentation. New international tournaments. Real Player Motion Data During gameplay, technical data is captured from the player via a motion capture camera, which is connected to the player’s sleeve on the real-life player suit. The technical data is collected and sent to the server where it is processed and used to make gameplay decisions. This data can also be used for things other than gameplay: clubs can use player motion data, movement types, control styles, unique player characteristics and more to improve their matchmaking system. Each player receives a password that they use to access their player data. Based on this, the player’s mobility, dribbling, acceleration, passing, shooting, shooting trajectory and more can be captured, as well as many other aspects of the movement and dynamic of the player. This is the new technology that has been added to FIFA 22. Real Player Motion Data Player Data Each player has a player data account that is accessed by a password. The player data contains their specific statistics, their performance data and the characteristics of their movement. An online football community can also contribute to the data for each player. The community can even earn points for contribution that it gets rewarded with. The player data contains many different elements and it is currently split into multiple categories. These are: Player Position: This includes: Team Position: This includes: Team

FIFA is the world's leading videogame brand that has redefined sports games since its debut on the original PlayStation® in September 2001. Players can choose from more than 200 officially licensed players, and compete with friends via one of the world's most comprehensive online services. FIFA is developed by EA Canada with Maxis, EA's primary EA Sports label. What does FIFA stand for? FIFA stands for Feile Ar Theas Gaelach, which means "World Soccer". Some people also call FIFA "Football Management Simulation", "Footeball", and "Football Management Simulation". Why does FIFA not use the name "Soccer"? In FIFA, the name "soccer" is the generic term for the many different styles of football. The primary purpose of FIFA is to simulate football. To FIFA, football is just a way to get their players from one part of the pitch to the other and score goals. Some people also call FIFA "Football Management Simulation" because of the many features of the game that let you run your own team. What does the F stand for in FIFA? The F stands for "Football". When EA Sports first started to make videogames for people to play around the world, they took the easy approach and called their new game "Soccer". In many countries, "Football" is the most commonly used term for the sport of soccer. In most of these countries, "Soccer" is not as popular as "Football", so EA Sports started calling their new game "Soccer". It didn't take long before the people of the world started to think that the name "Soccer" was a little stupid. The next time EA Sports wanted to call their game "Soccer", they decided to use the letter F, because there's no letter "S" in the word "Football". What does FIFA mean? FIFA means "Football International Association". FIFA is the official name of the international governing body of the sport of association football. Its aim is "to govern, develop, promote and maintain football throughout the world." When does FIFA start? FIFA starts in 1894, when the very first FIFA World Cup was held in what is now Germany. Since the start of the 20th century, every four years, a few teams from around the world (the "Big Four") make it to a big international football event known as the World Cup
