But it takes a long time for me to get up every morning, no matter how early, no matter how tired I am, no matter how snugly bedded down I feel. When I do get up, my first thought is "it's up to 10 minutes yet" and then I have to remind myself that I can't stop now. I'm going to get up. I'm going to get dressed, shower, make breakfast for the kids. So

I'll sleep in. I'll get a full night's sleep. Monday, August 02, 2013 Rain. Thunder. Lightning. Flash floods in the mountains. Flash floods in my basement.

Everything is flooded. I am not at all surprised that I am down to just a half-gallon of drinking water. I am surprised that I am just learning that this is just the beginning of a days-long stint in which our remaining water, as well as electricity, will be cut off for at least a couple of days. I am also surprised that I am hungry. The kids were up when the thunder started, and the rain started, and we stopped the bath they had been having. They were fretful when the doorbell rang, wondering why it was there. Then we saw the sirens. When I suggested they should go back to bed, they refused. They wanted to play a game of Monopoly. (Yes, it was the beginning of Hurricane Andrew, but that was as far as our Game Boy Advance would take us. I took the children outside so I could "protect" them. Their mother was not home. I had made it clear from the very beginning that there was to be no hiding in the basement. I am not sure the children really understood. I was seven or eight when I realized that
