“When we started to investigate what the future of football might be, we felt that we could take advantage of the advances in artificial intelligence and computer graphics to make a football game that has an even more immersive experience,” said Aaron McHardy, vice president of product at EA Sports. “FIFA 22 has a completely new and improved AI, which responds to your every touch, dodge and move,” he continued. “In addition to the latest animation upgrades, more players and more depth in the way they play have been added, as well as a true 3D engine that allows players to run at full speed on the pitch.” Re-thinking the ‘ball itself’ The game’s “true 3D engine” is a significant leap forward in many ways. In FIFA 19, the ball had always felt a little sluggish and ‘floaty’ due to static physics, but this has now been significantly improved. “The ball now has springs and leaves the pitch,” explained McHardy. “You now get the feeling that the ball is less hindered in its movement and that it flows in the air a lot smoother than before. The shapes of the grass and the ditches change from game to game, and with the ‘chases’ you are able to guide the ball into a specific area to score, as opposed to chasing it with the player as it goes from goal to goal.” This improved play mechanic is one of several changes to enhance the ‘immersive’ feel of the game. The ball also now has a greater range of movement (more than 50m) when in flight, as well as less dependency on the player’s performance. “You no longer need to run as quickly or jump as high as in the past, as well as to avoid injuries and exhaustion,” said McHardy. “You have improved stamina and make less mistakes and give less penalties.” Enhancing the game There are many other changes in FIFA 22 as well. Real-life player names, such as Lionel Messi and Neymar, are now visible throughout the world-renowned stadium-side presentations. Player appearances on the pitch have been significantly improved, with players seen in motion over the crowd. The game also features a brand new commentary system.
