System Requirements: PC operating systems: Windows 7 Macintosh OS X: 10.7 Lion / 10.8 Mountain Lion / 10.9 Mavericks / 10.10 Yosemite Hot air is discharged by various types of combustion heat sources (i.e., such as an open fire, a microwave oven, an electric stove, etc.), or heat from friction caused by a fan. Such heat is one of the components required for cooking food, heating water, etc. Hot air is generated by combustion of a fossil fuel or by a thermal reaction of oxygen and a heat-generating source. The heat source is a material that is consumed to undergo a chemical reaction, and the heat of reaction thus generated is discharged to the outside of the hot air supply device. As the heat-generating source, kerosene, a gas, ethanol, a combustible liquid (e.g., kerosene, alcohol, or fuel oil), etc., are used depending on the presence of an ignition source such as a fire, an electric stove, and a microwave oven. In the case of an open fire, a fire is ignited and continuously burns, and thus the heat source is continuously discharged to the outside of the hot air supply device. The hot air supply device may be constructed in a rectangular container having a door as a ventilation port. The hot air supply device, when being used, is disposed in a room or an indoor space where food is cooked or water is heated, thereby allowing hot air generated in the container 0cc13bf012
