There is no shortage of amazing photo editing software for the photographer. Some are for Mac OS, such as Apple's iPhoto, which includes an editor, or The GIMP by the fine folks at the GNU project (see the nearby sidebar). All of these tools can help bring some great results to your work. If you're just learning how to edit photos, the most basic, affordable, and powerful photo editor that I know of is Adobe Photoshop Elements. You can create JPEG and other formats, as well as manipulate RAW images. If you want to upgrade your editing power, try Photoshop CS6 Standard, which includes all the usual suspects, as well as a few special effects and features. For even more editing power, Photoshop CS5 and CS6 include Adobe Camera RAW (ACR) as a separate program. You can open RAW files in Photoshop and easily edit the shots before saving them. You can even throw the images on the web with the same ease as JPEG files. Creative licensing and options The price of Photoshop is not cheap, but, when you factor in all that it offers, it's not unreasonable for pros. However, Photoshop software is not cheap either: • Photoshop CS5: The Standard version is $700. The Standard version includes the base program, but it's limited to 10,000 images and one program license. • Photoshop CS5: The Extended version is $1000. The Extended version includes the base program, plus additional features like the Action Set B effects (see the nearby sidebar). • Photoshop CS6: The Standard version is $1250, the Extended version is $1500. These versions include the base program. • Photoshop CS6: The Master Collection version (available from Macworld on a one-time-only basis) is $3000, which includes all of the Standard and Extended features, plus new additional features like the Speed Grade filter and the Face Priority feature. The Master Collection version of Photoshop CS6 is available from Macworld on a one-time-only basis. For a limited time, Adobe also offers a Creative Cloud version of Photoshop that includes all of the software's features and updates as well as access to all of the latest releases. The Creative Cloud version of Photoshop is available for $50 per month with discounted rates for 1-, 2-, and 3-year subscription plans. You can purchase or try a free 30-day trial of Photoshop CC. Q: Angular fetch fails when called on page load I'm trying to fetch an external API and storing the output into a local variable called "response". The problem is that this API call, that I'm making is failing when I try to make it on page load, but works when I click on a button. Here is my service. import { Injectable } from '@angular/core'; import { Http } from '@angular/http'; import { Observable } from 'rxjs/Observable'; import 'rxjs/add/operator/map'; @Injectable() export class MyService { private url = ''; private http: Http; private headers = new Headers({ 'Content-Type': 'application/json' }); public response: Observable; constructor(private http: Http) { this.http = http; this.response = this.http.get('myURL', this.headers).map(res => res.json()); } public makeAPIRequest() { return this.response; } } My component. import { Component, OnInit, Inject } from '@angular/core'; import { MyService } from './shared'; import { Observable } from 'rxjs/Observable'; import 'rxjs/add/operator/map'; @Component({ selector: 'app-component', templateUrl: './component.component.html', styleUrls: ['./component.component.css'] }) export class ComponentComponent implements OnInit { constructor(@Inject(MyService) myservice: MyService) {} ngOnInit() { this.makeAPIRequest(); } public makeAPIRequest() { this.myservice.makeAPIRequest().subscribe(data => {

In the past when we come across different products it would always be a heart-thumping moment for the customer to understand its usage or features. However, in today's digital world with the rapid increase in technology and with the changing trends, its getting hard to manage and understand the different products as well as their features. As a result most of the times, the customers are unaware of their features in addition to the usage. Manufacturers and companies have started releasing their product in the market with a few features only instead of the whole package. We understand that the other companies and suppliers also have to offer value-for-money and thus they come up with this kind of products and services. As per the recent surveys around 50% of the customers are not aware of the functions of the product and service they are purchasing. Not to mention that the other half of the 50% know but they don't understand the use of the product as well as the benefits. With the help of the people working in technology and businesses, to understand the need of the customers and the support they required, we have managed to come up with a "How-to-Know-What-to-Buy" guide that every product and service should deliver to help the customer understand and know exactly what they are buying and how it will help them to get the maximum out of it. Here is a quick look at few of the products and the use of the products: Life-Saving Devices These are the things that every one knows and understands. These are things that in the market if they are not available or popular, then the competitors would have offered it or even developed their own. Doctors: Doctors are the ones who save lives. They know what to expect. If the healthcare professionals in their area cannot perform the operation, they are the ones that step into the theatre and save lives. In this guide, we are going to discuss about the "How-to-know-what-to-buy" guide for the customers going to use the care devices. Banks: Banks are the only ones that offer loans to the different people, companies and individuals. They understand the requirement of money that comes through the different avenues. They offer the best money to the customer that he/she needs to pay. In this guide, we are going to discuss about the "How-to-know-what
