stage renal disease: consequences for host defense against opportunistic infections. Recent studies indicate that neutrophils, an essential cell type for host defense against opportunistic infections, are disarmed in patients with end-stage renal disease (ESRD). This clinical situation is marked by widespread neutropenia, a heightened risk for dissemination of microorganisms, and eventual bacterial death due to impaired mechanisms of innate immunity. We assessed the hypothesis that these mechanisms are defective at the level of proteinase production and release in ESRD patients.
We first examined the activity of three serine proteinases (neutrophil elastase, proteinase 3, and cathepsin G) and one metalloproteinase (MMP-8), which are involved in the pathogenesis of acute lung and skin infections, with samples of neutrophils and sera from healthy donors, patients with ESRD (n = 29), and transplant recipients (n = 17). The release of neutrophil proteinases was measured by means of their autodestructive potential and their capacity to affect target tissues. A significant reduction
