Soft tissue anatomy of the anterolateral thigh in the cadaver: Importance of muscular anatomy when harvesting the adipofascial flap. The anterolateral thigh (ALT) flap is one of the most common local flaps in the reconstruction of soft tissue defects. It is well known that it is the result of multiple combined fascias, but the detailed anatomic information on the muscles of the ALT is scant. We have recently made an anatomical study to define the muscles of the ALT and to determine the insertion sites of the muscles. In our anatomic study, 10 fresh cadavers (4 men and 6 women; mean age, 65 years) were dissected under a surgical microscope. In total, 11 muscles were found to originate from the lateral surface of the vastus lateralis muscle. The mean number of muscles found in each specimen was 4.5. The mean width of the muscle was 8.8 mm, and the mean length was 31.9 mm. The abductor magnus muscle formed a wide range of shapes, including an oblique inferiorly extending portion. The origin point of the adductor longus muscle was marked on the posterior side of the patella at a mean distance of 19.5 mm from the inferior pole of the patella, along the line of the rectus femoris and vastus lateralis muscle. The muscle body of the adductor magnus was dissected to a mean depth of 30.5 mm from the origin point, and the aponeurotic membrane which originated from the insertion of the vastus lateralis muscle was dissected to a mean depth of 48 mm. The detailed knowledge of the muscle anatomy of the ALT is important in the harvesting of the ALT flaps.#!/usr/bin/env python # # Copyright 2008, Google Inc. # All rights reserved. # # Redistribution and use in source and binary forms, with or without # modification, are permitted provided that the following conditions are # met: # # * Redistributions of source code must retain the above copyright # notice, this list of conditions and the following disclaimer. # * Redistributions in binary form must reproduce the above # copyright notice, this list of conditions and the following 6d1f23a050
