I do not want to make two copies of my code for both themes, and have no clue how to share them. What I need is a way to make one "global" jQuery dialog, that both themes could modify, without the file size growing much larger than it already is. Does any one know how to do this? Thanks a lot! A: If you know how to load your themes separately, you can simply load them once, and assign them to $.fn.myDialog (where "myDialog" is the class of the div that uses the dialog, for example). If you don't know how to
