The device has a wifi lan and vlan 1 (192.168.0.106). The current iphone is a jailbroken device. We want to give it a ip address to be static, so it can't be changed by users. Is it possible? A: If by static you mean not changeable by others, no. The Device is bound to its interface IP address of 192.168.0.106, unless told otherwise from the DHCP server. The only way to change its IP address by someone else is to remove the current MAC address from the built-in wireless network and replace it with another one, and then put the new one into that built-in wireless network, and then reassign the IP address from the DHCP server.
